On the Regulation of Business Behavior by the Civil Code Civil Law Examination of the Legal Concept Legal Technique and the Particularity of Business Behavior

Jiang Daxing

Abstract The contemporary civil law shall maintain the legal notion of the " totality of the social evolutionism" and echo the needs to regulate the society that is highly commercialized securitized information-based globalized and ethical/integrity fading. Thus on the one hand the codification of the Civil Code should be oriented to help us restore the " good society" on the other hand it should also enable the law to " response elastically" to the society. From legal technicality the best mode of " codification of commercial law" is to codify the Commercial Code that is co-existed with the Civil Code. The " second best mode" is to promulgate the General Principles of the Commercial Law. The commercial behavior is different from civil behavior in terms of type validity agency etc. If the civil law is treated to be " exclusive" and the commercial law is treated to be part of the " civil law" instead of the special law of the " private law" we will be unable to effectively regulate the commercial relationship and spread the concept of independent commercial law/commercial adjudication through the whole spectrum of the society and maintain a good commercial law order and conserve legal resources—if the codification of the Civil Code neglects the " special needs of commerce" it will turn out to be a conceited and unsuccessful campaign.

The Famous Art. 1 of Swiss Civil Code Legal Thoughts Methodology and Judicial Practice

Li Min

Abstract The scope of sources of civil law and sequence of application of the sources are basic questions of application of civil law. The article 1 of Swiss Civil Code initiatively provides that the sources of civil law include statute law customary law and rules made by judges which exerts a far-reaching influence on the history of civil law. The article 1 of Swiss Civil Code accords with the immanent requirement of legal science and reflects social and historical background and transformation of legal thoughts. The sources and its application methods have developed with the judicial practice in the past one hundred years and established a model for civil legislation and judicial practice of other countries which may provide much enlightenment for the legislation of Chinese Civil Code.

The Application of Limitations of Copyright in the Copyright Law to Foreign Works Also on the Revision of the Statutory License to Broadcast Works

Wang Qian

Abstract Berne Convention and other international copyright treaties require member countries to grant protection to works that originate from other member countries but international copyright treaties have nothing to do with how a member country protects a work that originates from this member country. When Berne Convention permits member countries to impose conditions on the broadcasting right it requires that "these conditions shall apply only in the countries where they have been prescribed". It does not mean that the restrictions can only apply to works that originate from the countries where the restrictions have been prescribed. On the contrary it means that when a member country broadcasts a work that originates from another member country in accordance with the restriction ee

Environment Public Interest Litigation From the Perspective of Comparative Law

Cao Mingde

Abstract Environmental public interest litigation has been invented in the United States as citizen's enforcement which was purported to motivate citizens and social organizations supervising the compliance and enforcement of environmental law in order to fill the gap created by government failure and market failure in environmental arena. The Environment Protection Law of PRC and Civil Procedure Law of PRC have been amended in recent years they explicitly allow some social organizations to sue polluters on behalf of public interest that's a legislative breakthrough in China. Compared with American environmental public interest litigation there are only some NGOs qualified to file suit into court individual citizens are not permitted to sue the violators on public behalf but they are in the U. S. Plaintiffs of environmental public interest litigation fall into three categories in the United States Article III standing or jurisdictional standing statutory standing or non-jurisdictional standing and prudential standing. There is both individual standing and organizational standing but the criteria of the two sorts are different. With regard to the transfer of litigation costs the Congress held that lawyers must eat therefore plaintiff who prevailingly wins the lawsuit will be awarded lawyer's fees the costs of suit will be assumed by defendant while in China there is no statutory provisions relating to this issue. In judicial practice some environmental tribunals in China have awarded lawyer's fees to plaintiff's lawyer when he or she won the case but the issue should be solved through institutional arrangement.

Pedigree Resolving of Objection to Execution A Comparative Perspective

Ding Baotong

Abstract Although we have initially established the system of Action of Objection to Execution in Chinese Civil Procedure Code and provided simple procedural rules for it through the Judicial Interpretation of the Supreme Court. as a very complex and systematic system there are so much deeper and systematic problems to resolve. Therefore deeper and systematic research on it is necessary. We must frame and resolve it's system pedigree which is based on the accurate definition of it's connotation & denotation. So we can find it's defects in Chinese present legislation and propose the feasible plan to systematically improve and implement it.

The Debt Theoretical Analyses on the Relationship of Effective Judgment and Settlement Agreement Concurrently Explicating the Rules of "Wu Mei" Case

Zheng Jinyu

Abstract From the angle of private law the relationship between rights and obligations in prestation-judgment is a judgment-debt which is the substantive basis of the enforcement power of the effective judgment. When the judgment-debt and the right of cl

Is "Beyond a Reasonable Doubt" Identical to Inner Conviction

Li Changsheng

Abstract With regard to the comparative study on standards of proof in Common Law System and Continental Law System many commentators are inclined to compare them from the perspective of the final psychological states and then have concluded that both standards are identical. However this kind of "static and parochial comparison methodology" in the absence of paying enough attention to environments of system-operating and processes of fact-finding jumps to its conclusion which is far from accuracy. In fact in light of the scopes of applicable procedure and elements to be proved as well as the risk distributions of "residual doubt" considerable differences exist in standards of proof between two legal systems with the United States and Germany as typical cases which compel standards of proof in spite of being literally identical to generate widely divergent normative effects. The differences of two legal systems stem directly from the diversity among procedural structures procedural functions basic ele l e s c —

The Realities of the Constitutional Transformation in the African Countries and Analysis on Its Causes

Cheng Mai

Abstract the current development of constitutionalism in African countries appears to degrade into superficiality while the average African people tend to show indifference to the constitutionalist democracy. The independence constitutions of the African countries were more an imitation of their suzerain without paying substantial attention to their local needs which failed to be implemented successfully while the anti – constitutionalist instrumentalism upon the constitution prevailed shortly after the independence. After 1990s facing the increasing international pressure a new wave of constitutional reform was initiated while the elites are still monopolizing the state power. The paradigm of independent and able citizen is of little applicability under the African context. In contrast to the western development route the constitutional transformation in Africa started with legal system then certain economic and social foundation were established lacking cultural support. Considering their vested interests the African political elites are reluctant to foster a constitutional culture. The democratic political party system is the key to further the constitutional transformation in African countries and constitutions of most African countries also recognize the importance of the democratic political party system while in reality the rise of dominant party system brings negative impact on the future of the constitutional transformation in the African countries.

Rule of Law or Autonomy The Transformation of the Freedom of Religion in the United States through the Lens of Two Cases

Zhang Zheng

Abstract The most important Supreme Court cases regarding free exercise of religion for the latest thirty years of the United States namely Employment Division v. Smith and Hosanna Tabor Evangelical Lutheran Church v. EEOC signifies the paradigm shift of the free exercise jurisprudence of the Supreme Court. Historically the free exercise jurisprudence in connection with the ideal of the rule of law that it presumes has four basic paradigms the rule of positive law the rule of neutral law the rule of common law and the rule of social law. These four paradigms are represented by four groups of the Supreme Court cases. Smith and Hosanna Tabor embody the rule of neutral law and the rule of social law respectively. The former three paradigms manifest the various understandings of the concept of the rule of law at the state law level while the fourth one points toward a new trend of the free exercise jurisprudence from state governance to social autonomy. The underlying motivating force of this trend lies in the transition of the discourse of political philosophy from liberalism to pluralism and the development of the pluralist social forces of the United States.

French Legislation about Consumer' s Right of Withdrawal of Contract and Its Inspiration

Ling Xuedong

Abstract French consumer' s right of withdrawal means that consumer has right to withdraw his acceptance within certain period and its legislation applies early to off-premises contract then to consumer credit distance sales timeshare holiday life insurance and other fields. Implanting relevant provisions of EU directives the French Consumption Code has made unification regarding consumer' s right of withdrawal. Different types of transactions provided different withdrawal periods. Where the required information has not been duly provided to the consumer the withdrawal period shall be extended. In principle the exercising of right of withdrawal will result in making restitution. Except for freight and credit principal' s interest the bona fide consumer does not assume any liability of indemnity. Chinese legislation about consumer' s right of withdrawal is scattered so statutory construction should be rearranged and dealing with the relationship with civil law. It' s suggested to balance our economic development and consumer protection level expand the scope of application unify withdrawal period specify withdrawal method and provide legal effect and cost sharing of consumer' s right of withdrawal.
